The mission of the Frontier Project is to prove that sustainable design can be economical, efficient and inviting by demonstrating practical solutions for Southern California living and working environments. The Frontier Project is a LEED® Platinum education and sustainable resource facility located in the heart of Rancho Cucamonga.

This complex facilitates the latest green methods and technologies in water, energy, and site conservation.

LEED is a measurement tool for green building in the United States and it is developed and continuously modified by workers in the green building industry, especially in the ten largest metro areas in the U.S.
